

NORTH CAROLINA "A Good Place to Live"

The State maintains five institutions of higher learning for negroes and the following institutions for whites: University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; The North Carolina College for Women, Greensboro; North Carolina State College, Raleigh; East Carolina Teachers College, Greenville; Appalachian State Normal School, Boone, and the Cullowhee State Normal School, Cullowhee. In addition to the State-owned institutions already mentioned, there are thirty-two privately endowed institutions of higher learning for whites and seven for colored. Among the well known private institutions in the State are Duke University, Davidson College, Wake Forest College, Elon College, Guilford College, Flora MacDonald College, Meredith, Peace, St. Mary's, Queen's, Salem and Louisburg.

Citizens of North Carolina are energetically and persistently seeking to enrich their existing educational opportunities.

The atmosphere of reverence can only be appreciated by being enjoyed. Some of North Carolina's beautiful churches are herewith pictured and new ones are being continually added. They represent all creeds.

The ever-varying houses of the home-like communities of this uniquely varied State run from the majestic Southern Colonial homestead and the impressive mansions of North Carolina stone, through the almost endless variety of comfortable modern houses, cottages and bungalow types.

Possibly one of the most surprising and pleasing angles of home building or buying in North Carolina is its unusually low cost. This is due to the fact that they can be built from the easily obtained pine, hardwood, brick and other materials produced and economically handled in almost all sections of the State by the effective native labor. Home building is very active.

Whether it be at the seashore or coastal plains, the soothing Southern pines, the active uplands, or the majestic mountain regions, you are cordially invited to come and enjoy the matchless hospitality and comforts of North Carolina.
